

The craziest thing I've done is...

...while working on my master's degree, I hosted a foreign exchange student from Mongolia. We decided to drive to Mexico for a weekend to do some shopping. I told him to make sure he had his passport, and he assured me that he did. After our shopping spree, we were stopped at the border, and we were denied re-entry into the United States because he did not have his passport. We were forced to remain in Mexico until the passport could be sent to us.

My favorite place to study is...

...at home. I have surrounded myself with my favorite decorations and motivational posters. This allows me to focus my energy and efforts on my academic pursuits (when "The Golden Girls" reruns aren't on TV).

If I could share an afternoon with anyone, I would love to share it with...

...my father's father. He died in 1944, which was before I was born. I have heard stories about this tremendous man my entire life. There are no pictures of him, so I don't even know what he looked like. I would love to spend an afternoon with the ancestral patriarch of my family.

If I knew I could not fail, I would...

...provide individualized educational interventions to the youth of Athens, Ga., to boost their scores on the various high-stakes standardized tests.

After graduation, I plan to...

...enter private counseling practice working with underserved populations. I would like to continue conducting research in the field of counseling psychology. My interests include achievement deficits of American males of African descent and grandparenting issues.
