

Red Clay Writing Project

A Site of the National Writing Project

What happens when we see writing as a political and social act?

Join other experienced K-12 teachers from Northeast Georgia who are interested in literacy teaching and learning for students with diverse needs.

Experience intensive inquiry into issues of race, class, gender, language, ethnicity, equity, and social justice in schools as well as the community.

Develop your own writing (narrative, poetry, action research, digital projects) with daily time to write and the support of peer writing groups and coaches.

Become part of the National Writing Project, a collaborative teacher network with opportunities for teachers in urban and rural schools, teachers of English Language Learners, and teachers focusing on the impact of poverty.

Cultivate leadership in providing professional development for your colleagues.

2009 Summer Institute Literacy Teaching and Learning

A collaboration of faculty from area schools and the UGA College of Education

June 8-July 1, 2009

8:30-4:00

114 Aderhold Hall, UGA

Apply for a RCWP Summer Fellowship.

Recipients will get

- 6 tuition-free graduate credits or
- 3 tuition-free graduate credits plus a stipend
- free books and readings

Institute Co-directors:

Lois Alexander
Clarke County School District

JoBeth Allen
University of Georgia

Bob Fecho
University of Georgia

Attend our
Information Reception
Saturday, January 24
10-noon
114 Aderhold Hall

For information, contact Emily Pendergrass at rcwp@uga.edu or 706-542-4619.