Section 2: 3:30 to 4:45 Tues/Thurs

Course Overview

This course is designed to enhance understanding of leisure in a diverse society. Students will examine factors that influence leisure, explore how leisure mirrors broader cultural values, and learn ways to use leisure to expand their own cultural understandings. In addition, students will learn to think critically, understand and respect different perspectives, and appreciate the cultural and contextual nature of their choices and actions.

Course Objectives

By the end of this course students should be able to:

1. Explain why leisure is a significant context for understanding diversity;
2. Discuss the complexity of social factors that affect the positionality of people in our society;
3. Discuss the ways that leisure acts to build community, and the special significance of this for people who are marginalized in mainstream culture; and
4. Discuss the ways that leisure can be a site of conflict, power, and social control.

Required Materials

TEXTBOOK: Kottak, P. C. and Kozaitis, K. A. (2008). On Being Different: Diversity and Multiculturalism in the North American Mainstream [Third Edition]. NY: McGraw Hill.

Additional materials will be posted on WebCT or assigned in class.

Academic Honesty

Students are expected to read, understand, and comply with all aspects of the UGA Academic Honesty Policy available online at <http://www.uga.edu/ovpi/honesty/acadhon.htm>. Any suspicion that a student has violated that code will be processed through the Office of the Vice President for Instruction as described on the above website. Please comply with this code in your own work and report suspicious activity of other students to the instructor.

Of particular relevance in this course is academic honesty in relation to student authorship of work they turn in as their own. Students must be the sole author of any written work submitted in their name (except for acknowledged group projects). Students must correctly cite sources that influence the content of their essays, and avoid language that is identical or similar to anything from another source without using quotation marks or giving proper credit. The instructor is available for guidance and help in avoiding plagiarism provided that students ask for help before turning in an assignment, and many useful guidelines are available online.

Class Format

This course will entail active participation in class activities and discussion, as well as individual work outside of class. There will be very few lectures or facts to memorize; instead, students will be encouraged to think about issues from increasingly critical perspectives (critical, by the way, means careful and insightful rather than judgmental). Students who simply put in a presence without actively engaging with or thinking about the material will not earn good grades in this class. Hopefully, students will challenge themselves in ways that make this course interesting and relevant to their own lives.

Instructor's Comment: I assume that students have an interest in learning and will be responsible participants in this class. You and I share the same expectations of each other: we will be on time, we will be prepared for that day's discussion by having done the assigned readings or activities, we will share our ideas and reactions in class discussion, we will be respectful of one another, and we will do our best in meeting these expectations. If you commit yourself to that and truthfully try to do your best, I will give the time and assistance to help you get the most out of this class.

Class Culture

As a class that is studying diversity, we must begin by acknowledging and respecting the diversity that exists among ourselves. We want students to share their thoughts and experiences, especially if their perspectives are different than the norms, expectations, or experiences of others in the class. In order for that to happen, we need to create a safe space where everyone's opinion is respected and differences are examined and explored in a non-judgmental fashion. Listen carefully to what others say. Ask questions that will help you understand their experiences and perspectives, and then share ways in which your experiences or opinions differ from theirs. Please speak up if you feel offended, troubled, or confused by something that is said, or if you feel excluded by assumptions that frame any part of our discussions, since your response might open the door to rich discussion. But remember to catch yourself if you're tempted to judge someone based on your own values. Our goal is to stay focused on the scholarly examination of issues rather than individuals, and to lace all discussion with respect for one another.

Assignments

Assignments allow students to earn points by showing that they've done the required work. Additional points are earned through strength or excellence in the quality of work and the depth of understanding that is displayed. Because most assignments are written essays, stronger writers have a better chance to earn higher grades. This is a great class for those who need to work on improving their writing. Students are encouraged to work with the UGA Writing Center (<http://www.english.uga.edu/writingcenter/>)-- it's free! Please note that students do not lose points on any assignment; they earn points through the quality of what they submit.

Attendance [25 points]: You might not realize it but your participation makes a significant contribution to class discussion. If you are not present, we are unable to hear your perspective or learn from stories you share. Therefore, attendance will be taken each class period. You will earn one point for each class you attend with a maximum of 25 points (allowing everyone to miss a few classes without being penalized).

The distinction between "excused" and "unexcused" absences is too arbitrary to enforce; therefore, we will follow the same policy you encounter at a job—you get paid if you are there and you don't get paid if you are not. But attendance is more than simply earning points. Please let the instructor know when things arise that prevent you from being in class.

Participation [25 points]: Participation entails more than just showing up; it means that you are prepared each day for that day's discussion or activities, and that you are actively engaged with the class. You can participate by asking or answering questions, by sharing your experiences and opinions, or by listening to others and responding to what they have to say. Some participation points will also relate to tasks or response papers that stem from class activities.

Reading Assignments [25 points]: Unlike many other classes, we will not spend class time talking about the material you read in the textbook. This does not mean the textbook is unimportant—just the opposite! The assigned chapters provide important background information that we all share as we enter into discussion about other topics in class.

To help you focus, write a short summary/ reflection about each chapter or other assigned reading. These should be ½ to 1 page of bulleted points per chapter or article that summarize important ideas you want to remember about that reading.

Also unlike other classes, the readings are not assigned day by day but rather a group of readings are assigned for each segment of the class. In order to get the most out of class and to lighten your own workload, please attempt to read and write the summaries early in each that segment of the class. However, they are not due until the end of each segment as noted on the course schedule.

Essays [75 points total]: The semester will be divided into five parts, each with a specific focus. At the end of each part of the course, you will write and submit an essay that addresses the focal point of the material that was just covered. These essays will be graded; however, you will have an opportunity to revise and resubmit them at the end of the semester. These essays will address the following topics (the first four are also listed on the first page as the course objectives). See the handout for more information about what is expected in these essays.

1. Explain why leisure is a significant context for understanding cultural diversity;
2. Discuss the complexity of social factors that affect the positionality of people in society;
3. Discuss the ways that leisure acts to build community, and the special significance of this for people who are marginalized in mainstream culture;
4. Discuss the ways that leisure can be a site of conflict, power, and social control; and
5. Discuss how your understandings of leisure and cultural diversity have changed over the course of this semester.

Independent Activities [15 points total]: Students must earn points by attending presentations, films, or other events that address issues of diversity, or doing a special project of their choosing. All independent activities must be approved by the instructor beforehand. Other requirements and a more complete explanation is described in a separate handout. Some of the independent activities you might do include:

- Attend at least one cultural celebration or equivalent event focused on a segment of the population with which you do not typically identify.
- Attend speakers, movies, or discussions that address issues related to diversity.
- Read a novel by or about people whose life characteristics are different than yours.
- Do a special project working alone or in a small group.

Exams: None!

Grading

Students will earn points throughout the semester as shown here. At the end of the semester, grades will be assigned according to the attached chart. Note: Adjustments to the course agenda might result in minor changes to the point values shown below.

Basic Engagement (70pts maximum)
Attendance	25 pts	43%

Special Accommodations / Other Issues: Students with special needs should speak to the instructor the first week of the semester so that effective accommodation can be made. If emergencies or unforeseen circumstances arise during the semester that significantly affect your performance in this class, let the instructor know. Final grades of “Incomplete” will not be given except for instances of hardship that are documented by the Office of Student Support Services.
